SEAFORTH HISTORIC SHIPS

HMS BELFAST CRUISER 1939

Richard Johnstone-Bryden

Saturday 24th August 2013 will mark the 50th anniversary of HMS Belfast's final voyage as an operational warship. Commissioned on the eve of the Second World War, Belfast was built by Harland and Wolff's famous shipyard in the city that shares her name. Her eventful career has seen her involved in the capture of the German Liner Cap Norte, the battle of North Cape, the D-Day landings and the Yangtse Incident as well as further combat during the Korean war. Britain's largest historic ship, she was saved from the scrapyards in 1971 to become a museum ship – a lasting reminder of the powerful, big-gun armoured warships that formed the backbone of the Royal Navy in the first half of the twentieth century.

In her new moorings on the Thames, HMS Belfast now offers visitors a remarkable insight into the Royal Navy's technology of the time, as well as a glimpse into the onboard lives of those for whom she was home both during war and peace. This beautifully illustrated book gives the reader the unique opportunity to experience this great ship for themselves. As well as an introductory text which provides an overview of the vessel's rich history, the book features many contemporary full colour photographs and reveals the immense work involved in her preservation and ongoing conservation.
